Saving Young Lives Through Research

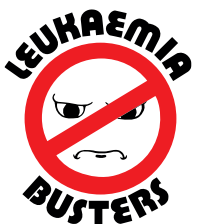

A message from our patrons

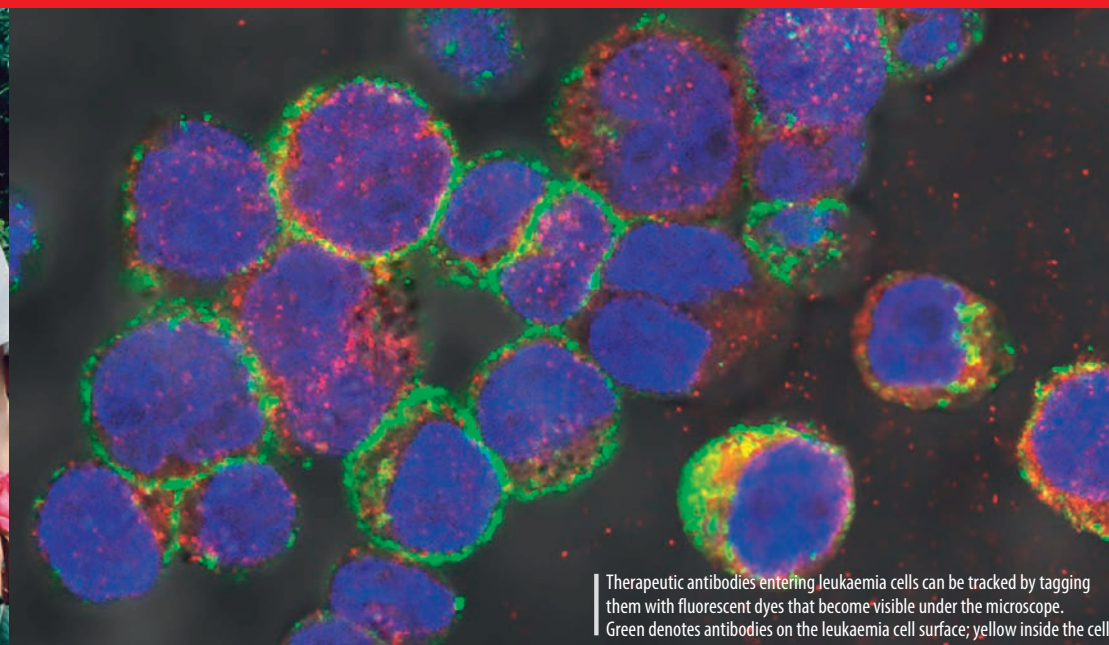

There is no easy way to combat cancer in any of its forms and we are all dependent on those who strive to find the solution. We are keen to support the work of Leukaemia Busters and we hope that you too can give your backing to them.

The design and printing of this brochure were kindly donated by March Creative and Hobbs the Printers.

Therapeutic antibodies entering leukaemia cells can be tracked by tagging them with fluorescent dyes that become visible under the microscope. Green denotes antibodies on the leukaemia cell surface; yellow inside the cell.

Who are we?

Leukaemia Busters was founded in 1989 by three sets of parents whose children were receiving treatment for leukaemia or lymphoma at Southampton General Hospital. Watching the harsh and sometimes dangerous side effects that chemotherapy had on their children they decided to take action and form a charity that would undertake research to improve treatment. Their vision has proven a spectacular success over the years.

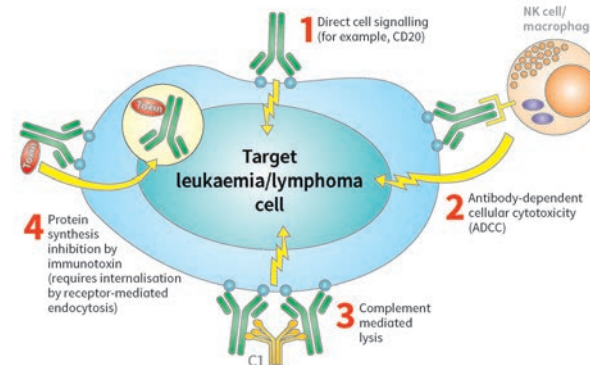

Our life saving objective

Our objective is to save lives through research to discover safer and more effective treatments that provide cures for currently incurable patients. The discovery of new treatments will prove highly beneficial for all patients in the future, young and old alike.

Our research based in The Simon Flavell Laboratory will be translated into new treatments for leukaemia and lymphoma patients.

How we will achieve this

Since formation in 1989 Leukaemia Busters has continuously funded research work into new antibody-based treatments for leukaemia and other blood cancers and made important discoveries that will help shape the future. We directly employ a team of highly qualified research scientists who conduct their work from The Simon Flavell Leukaemia Research Laboratory at Southampton General Hospital. For over two and a half decades our scientists have been at the forefront in the fight against leukaemia using antibodies as guided missiles to attack leukaemia cells in the patient's body.

Antibodies can kill leukaemia cells in different ways

How you can help

Leukaemia Busters receives no government or NHS support and relies entirely on public donations to conduct our life saving research. Our overhead costs are kept to an absolute minimum so that we can spend the vast majority of your donation in supporting our scientists' research work. Please consider giving us your support and help us in our life saving quest.
